L.A. Controller Ron Galperin released the City's Comprehensive Annual Financial Report for Financial Year 2017. In last week's report, the Controller detailed the state of the City's finances while outlining challenges that may be on the horizon.

Concurrently, the Controller published an interactive Community Financial Report transparently detailing how taxpayer dollars are spent. Both can be explored at cfr.controlpanel.la <https://lacontroller.us17.list-manage.com/track/click?u=0689bc999e6529efb2132dd1e&id=895d0cad4a&e=d6704bb280> .

After an August 2017 audit in which the Controller outlined concerns <https://lacontroller.us17.list-manage.com/track/click?u=0689bc999e6529efb2132dd1e&id=78d6298d11&e=d6704bb280> about the City's IT readiness should disaster strike, a steering committee to address the issue met to begin a wide ranging discussion about disaster recovery.

Representatives of the Mayor's office and from the L.A. Fire Department, Information Technology Agency and more laid the groundwork for an emergency preparedness plan.

"With the safety of 4 million people at stake, we need to protect critical IT operations if we don't want all of our other emergency planning to be compromised," Controller Galperin said.

Transforming Government

"I am pleased this subcommittee has kicked off these important discussions, but know there is much work left to protect Angelenos."

Coro Southern California convened a talk last week about tech and democracy, a vital intersection in these times.

"We are here to leverage tech and data to make government more responsive and responsible," Controller Galperin said at the event, "to help build faith in our institutions, especially when so many are being attacked."

"We need to transform government...there are so many ways we can do that from the inside and from the outside."

Having Fun Isn't Hard When You've Got a Library Card

Among the many things that make Los Angeles great is our Los Angeles Public Library - 72 branches throughout our city. I got to spend a little time last week at the Central Library, a marvel of books and architecture.

Living to Tell the Tale

Recently, we honored the memories of the 12 million people - and six million Jews - who died in the Holocaust.

I am the son of a Holocaust survivor.

I'm here today because, with so many Holocaust survivors no longer with us, as we soon will come to the place with no survivors living, it's up to me, it's up to us to tell the stories - like my dad's, pictured here with my grandmother - and continue the legacy.

The Count

We know the magnitude of the problem, but we need to better understand the detailed scale.

Earlier this year, I took part in the 2018 Homeless Count to ensure those in need get vital resources while also addressing the single biggest problem facing our city.
